Dismissal meaning in tamil

(Definition of summary dismissal from the Cambridge Business English Dictionary © Cambridge University Press) Human-ResourceDefinition: Constructive dismissal is a situation where the employee is forced to leave or quit his/her job not because they want to, but because of the employer’s conduct. The resignation could be the result of bad working conditions or changes in terms of employment which leaves the employee with no other choice but to quit. Description: Constructive dismissal is very common in organisations. As such, most employees usually leave their boss and not the organisation. This could be because they don’t like the behaviour of the employer, were bullied at work, harassed, there was violence against you or the employers made you work in dangerous conditions. If an employee resigns from his/her job because of the employer then it could be considered as constructive dismissal. But, the employee has to show that the employer has committed a serious breach of contract which forced you to take such an action. Breach of contract would involve any of these conditions - your employer did not pay your dues or demoted you without any reason, hard/dangerous working conditions, change in the schedule outside your contract note such as night shifts, harassment, violence, etc. In such cases employees retain the right to seek legal course of action against the company and claim damages. The resignation could be triggered by a single or a series of incidents which have already happened in the past. However, one important point to note is that the employee might think that the reason behind the resignation was the employer but it is very difficult to prove it in the court of law. Hence, unless and until the employee does not have any substantial evidence against the employer, it would be tough to prove it. If your evidence is not substantial then there is a good chance that the employer would be given the benefit of doubt. Need Help? I won't keep you waiting Status of district court case Nature of business shows-dismiss. Status shows-contested-dismiss. Does dat means my lawyer has asked to dismiss the case? No lawyer will ask to dismiss the case the case dismissed when the process is complete i.e. the suit is filed and the defendant has appeared filed written statement evidence produced by parties arguments heard then the court pronounce it's decision [i.e. dismissed or decreed never doubt the integrity of a lawyer Advocate Kanwarjit Singh Pruthi Googling your legal issue online?The internet is not a lawyer and neither are you.Talk to a real lawyer about your legal issue. Nope! It means both the parties duly contested the case and on merits it stands dismissed. No fault on the part of lawyer. Better prepare for appeal and present your case well. There is every chance for reversal. All the best. dear questioner, obviously not, you should clear first that you filed the case or you contested the case, i mean to say that someone else filed it against you? however ,it can't be presumed that your lawyer has asked to dismiss the matter. you should confirm that on which ground it was dismissed. let me tell you clearly if you are contesting the matter then dismissal will be in your favor. if you filed it then ask your lawyer that on which ground the case has been dismissed. No, contested dismissed means, the Presiding Officer after gone through the entire and after hearing the pleading of the parties pronounced the order. meaning thereby your counsel has not asked to dismissed the case, rather your advocate pleaded your case. that depends upon certain conditions rest you have to cheque the court file bcoz the case file is different so first of all check the court file then you will know what happen with your case and only after that Advocate Jagdeep Pal Singh Randhawa Report abuse?
