If I'd studied harder at school, I would have a better job now I might have a better job now I'd be absolutely starving now if I didn't eat since yesterday. if I hadn't eaten since yesterday. If she'd known about the party, she would come. she would have come. she'll definitely be here later. she'd definitely be here later. she'd have been here later. If I hadn't come here today, I wouldn't be learning about conditionals now. I wouldn't learn about conditionals. If you had been in her position, what would you have done? what did you do? what would you do? what would you say? what will you say? what would you have said? If you were offered a well-paid job in another country, would you have taken it? would you take it? will you take it? If we hadn't been in such a hurry, we wouldn't have forgotten the sandwiches. we would have forgotten the sandwiches. we didn't forget the sandwiches. I'd have given her a lift if I had known she needed one. if I hadn't known she needed one. If I knew she needed one. If you found those examples hard, you'll need to go back to your notes! you'd need to go back to your notes! you'd have needed to go back to your notes! If they have received your application, you'd have had an answer by now. you'll get an answer pretty soon. you had an answer now. If they hadn't received your application, your name won't be on the list. your name wouldn't be on the list. your name would be on the list. Conditional clauses are also called conditional sentences or if sentences. They always have two parts, a main clause and an if clause. These two parts are closely connected. The action in the main part can only happen if a certain condition is taking place. This condition has to be expressed in the if clause. Example: If he comes to my party, I will be happy. The condition is "If he comes to my party" and the consequence of this condition is "I will be happy". You can start a conditional clause with the main clause or the if clause; If I have a problem, Susan always helps me. or Susan always helps me if I have a problem. Zero Conditional The zero conditional is used with general statements, actions that are certainly happening and facts. We use it with things that are true. The present tense is used in both clauses. If there is a problem, I can always talk to Carol. Present Tense ----- Present Tense First Conditional - type I It's possible that . . . We use the Conditional I to talk about future situations that are realistic to happen. We use the present tense in the if-clause and the will-future in the main clause. Colin is an intelligent boy. It is April 15th. The exam is on April 23rd. He has enough time to study for the exam - he can pass it. If he studies, he will pass the exam on April 23rd. Present Tense ----- Will Future Second Conditional - type II It's possible, but not very probable. . . . We use the Conditional II to talk about future situations that are unreal or nearly impossible to happen. We use the past tense in the if-clause and conditional present in the main clause. Colin didn't study. He played football. It's April 22nd. Tomorrow is the exam. It is possible, but not very probable that he will pass the exam. If he studied, he would pass the exam. Past Tense ----- Conditional Present (would + infinitive) Third Conditional - type III It didn't happen and it is impossible now. . . . We use the Conditional III to talk about past situations that didn't happen. We use the past perfect tense in the if-clause and the conditional perfect in the main clause. It's April 23rd. Colin didn't pass the exam. If he had studied, he would have passed the exam. Past Perfect ----- Conditional Perfect (would + have + 3rd form) Using commas in conditional sentences When the condition is at the beginning of the sentence, you have to separate it from the main clause with a comma. If the condition is at the back of the sentence, you don't use a comma. Examples: If he comes to my party, I'll be happy. I'll be happy if he comes to my party.
